The Gramina Cuvée des Vignerons is a selection of plots from the Vourvoulos area and the wine made almost in the same fashion as their Santorini. Though it spends 12 months on the lees and 7 more in the bottle before its release into the market. 2018 shows the warmth of the vintage in terms of the fruit-driven and forward character. Quite expressive already with stone fruit complexity and herbal undertones. The generosity of the alcohol is well masked by the acidity that makes it linger on the palate for quite a long time. This is in such a young stage and I believe that needs definitely a couple of years before we see the full potential.
